CHARTS FOR NAVY

Covering Every Navigable Portion of the World.

U. S. Coasts Excepted, Prepared by the Hydrographic Office Under Chief Southland.

Washington, Nov. 29.—Commander W. H. Southland, Chief hydrographer of the navy, in his annual report, says the office has in progress the preparation of a series of charts intended to cover every navigable portion of the world excepting the United States coasts, so that United States vessels may be supplied with charts of "our own production for every region that a vessel may be called on to visit," and no risk be run in time of war of our being unable to obtain an article absolutely essential for the safe navigation of our vessels.

The publication of a series of sailing directions intended to cover the globe is in progress and world charts for 1905 for the use of navigators which are to represent the magnetic delineation and the horizontal intensity of the earth's magnetic force are in course of preparation.

"The question of danger from derelicts," says the chief hydrographer, "is becoming a grave one to mariners particularly to those who traverse the trans-Atlantic steamer routes."

He expresses the belief that it would be wise for our Government to specially detail one properly equipped vessel to patrol the trans-Atlantic lines from our coast to the eastern limit of the Georges Bank.

DISTRICT TEACHERS

The Second District Teachers' Association met at Madisonville Friday and Saturday, in annual session.

The sessions of the association were pleasant and profitable.

Prof. C. E. Dudley was elected President and the next annual meeting will be held in this city.

Other officers are Prof. E. McCully, Sebree, Secretary, and Prof. C. E. Sugg, Henderson, Treasurer.

The Executive Committee is composed of C. E. Dudley, A. C. Burton, J. B. Taylor, Miss Ruth Plain and Miss Katie McDaniel.

SECOND LOSS BY FIRE

Sustained by Citizen Formerly of Christian.

Mr. Grey Lewis, of Temple, Texas, as formerly of this city, lost a valuable barn by fire a few days ago. Concerning the fire the Daily Tribune says:

"The barn was completely consumed and it was only by the rapid and efficient work of the firemen that the beautiful modern residence was saved. The roof caught several times and considerable damage resulted in consequence to the building and furniture from fire and water.

"Fortunately Mrs. Lewis was using the horse and surrey. There is insurance but not enough to cover loss. Mr. Lewis is not at home. Our whole city sympathizes with Mr. and Mrs. Lewis. This is the second time they have suffered loss by the fire. It was but a few years ago their beautiful 9th street residence burned."

FOREST FIRES

Said to Have Caused Damage in Flat Lick.

Forest fires have been raging in the Flat Lick country for several days and some damage has been done to young timber and fencing. It is said that rabbits, birds and other small game have been driven before the flames and were forced to seek new quarters. The fires were started either by opossum hunters or sportsmen shooting in dry grass or leaves.

Picturesque Country in Mountains of British Columbia.

Perhaps in no other country could one go forth under the open sky and list to nature's "teachings" with better results, both political and practical, than in British Columbia, says the New York Herald. The vast arid deserts that Mother Nature slighted, the boundless oceans she left unportioned and unyielding, she has made up for in the favored land of British Columbia. Nature has shown partiality to this spot, not only by lavish strokes of indescribable beauty but with a liberal bestowal of buried wealth and uncovered resources.

British Columbia has oftentimes been depicted as a cold and inhospitable country. This is true only in a measure. There are vast resources for the employment of labor and capital—not forgetting the poet and the man with the camera and palette. Yoho valley, among the British Rockies, is practically a newly discovered paradise of big falls and glaciers. In this valley is Takakakan fall of 1,200 feet, the highest in America. The "discoverers" of this land of wealth and beauty are as numerous as the many legends, Spain made many explorations, but the first practical expeditions were made by the English. More recently there has been the inevitable American invasion with the camera. While the writer cannot produce incontrovertible evidence to support the statement, Spaniards began exploring as early as the sixteenth century. Very little was known of Vancouver, named after an English captain, until 1821, although fur trading was carried on previously to that time. There was no photographer there at the date mentioned, so we must take the word of the historian, who tells us that the first white man to traverse the jagged bosom of nature was Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who in 1790 followed the Fraser and Peace rivers to their sources. He left his own name duly tagged to the chief river of the land.

Many things good and useful do we get from British Columbia. The appetizing little anchovy, the delectable sturgeon, halibut of the largest and carloads of the best salmon in the world are a few of the table delicacies that come from there. The sight of the dense masses of fish which crowd up the Fraser river would make a visionary tale of the most imaginative of Ike Walton look like a weak almanac jest. Many trout, normal and abnormal, are taken from the pretty lakes that abound. There are seven different species of salmon, the four most important being the quinnat, sockeye (saw-squash), coho and steelhead. The sockeye or red salmon, is the most valuable. It is a species weighing from six to ten pounds. The salmon canneries are numerous and flourishing. They give employment to many hands in British Columbia, for the tins in which the fish are packed are manufactured on the spot. Many Indians and Chinese are employed. At one time a considerable quantity of salmon was sent across the continent and to Australia and even to London, packed in ice.

While the metalliciferous resources of the province may not be so well known, the country is famous for its wealth in coal. There is an abundance of sulphites of copper and iron, silver and lead ores, copper ore containing silver and iron and copper pyrites holding gold. The ores have a wide variation in value.

Faithful person to travel for well established house in a few counties, to manage business for agents. Local territory. Salary $20.00 per week with expenses additional, all payable in cash each week. Money for expenses advanced. Position permanent. Business successful and rushing. Standard House, 330 Dearborn St., Chicago.

Fatally Burned.

While trying to save his two-year-old sister, whose clothes had caught fire, eight-year-old Ernest Pettit was fatally burned at Ashville, N. C.

It will be good news to the mothers of small children to learn that croup can be prevented. The first sign of croup is hoarseness. A day or two before the attack the child becomes hoarse. This is soon followed by a persistent rough cough. Give Camphor's English Remedy freely as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the rough cough appears, and it will dispel all symptoms of croup. In this way all danger and anxiety may be avoided. This remedy is used by mothers throughout the country and has never been known to fail. It is, in fact, the only remedy that can always be depended upon and that is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by Cook & Higgins, druggists.

An Indiana Farmer.

I got well but became up part of the time, but was weak and seemed to gain no strength at all. Took Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsi and got better at once. Never had a medicine that seemed to do me so well. I am now well and not hesitate to recommend it to any one wishing a medicine of that kind." For sale by Cook & Higgins.

DOG'S QUEER TASTE.

Food of Lemons, He Will Do Many Tricks to Get Them.

Ted is a fox terrier with some additions and variations, inherited, it is said, from his mother. Indeed, says the Indianapolis News, a stranger unacquainted with his many talents, might, at first, insinuate that he was a cut, but none of Ted's many friends would ever think of mentioning the deficiencies of his pedigree to Ted. He is the pride of the neighborhood. His master, George W. Reid, is a mail carrier, and Ted is known to all the force. But it is to his mistress, Mrs. Reid, that Ted owes his education, and it is upon her that he lavishes most of his canine affection.

Mrs. Reid discovered Ted's appetite for lemons last winter. She had noticed his playing with an orange, and it may be that at his first sight of a lemon confused the identity of the two fruits. She had a sack of lemons in her hand, and Ted began to beg for one most vociferously. Thinking the first taste would cure him of his greediness, Mrs. Reid gave him a lemon. From that time Ted has made a daily demand for lemons, and he has never been denied. The yards in his neighborhood bear witness to Ted's appetite. Lemons are scattered about for nearly a block. When he is tired of playing Ted will lie for hours with his nose close to a lemon, seemingly enchanted by the fragrance.

Ted had been playing with an old lemon which he had long before sucked dry, when his mistress remarked in an ordinary tone, paying no heed to the dog, that she guessed she would get a fresh lemon. Ted was instantly on the alert. No more stale lemons for him! In an instant he was in the house before the cupboard, where the fruit is kept, barking and leaping about on his hind legs in his excitement. He was at the cupboard before his mistress had started for it. The dog of the celebrated "Old Mother Hubbard" could have displayed no more intimate acquaintance with the contents of his mistress' cupboard than did Ted.

When the lemon was brought to the front yard Mrs. Reid's first command was: "Now, Ted, buck like an old bulldog." The dog ran back and leaped into the air about three feet, coming down on his forepaws and stopping short precisely in the manner of a goat. He kept this up enthusiastically until a new order was given. Ted then danced, turned round and round in a waltz measure. He balanced the coveted lemon on his nose until his mistress counted "three," when he tossed it up and caught it in his mouth. Mrs. Reid held the lemon against the high side of the house almost as she could reach, and Ted made desperate leaps for it, running back and climbing up the weather boarding as far as he could.

Ted was quivering all over with excitement and anticipation. Indeed, he was getting as strenuous as his presidential namesake, so his joy was not longer deferred, though he had by no means exhausted his repertoire. After saying "please," by standing on his hind legs, folding his forepaws and whinnying in a supplicating manner, the lemon was his, and he proceeded to devour it with a sense of duty accomplished.

Science in the Ring.

Modern science has even stepped into the corset ring. A secret of the recent Corbett-Jeffries prize fight is now out. Corbett's seconds decided to employ oxygen instead of the old method of waving fans and towels. A tank of oxygen was concealed under the ring platform in Corbett's corner. To this was attached a long rubber tube, on the end of which was a spraying machine. As he returned to his corner each time a stream of oxygen was sprayed on his face.

Nursery Cars.

An enterprising American railroad has instituted a system of carriages reserved for children. The "nursery car" consists of a dining, dressing, bath, and sleeping compartment, the name of which six beds are arranged. The floors are thickly carpeted and the walls padded. A nurse is provided at the company's expense.

DREAMED OF AN OSTRICH.

Hunter Fell Asleep on Veldt and Thought He Was Robbed.

Hunting yarns were in order and it was to the African explorer for his contribution, says the New York Tribune.

"I was trekking along the southern coast of Africa a few years ago," said he, "and had spent most of the day shooting pheasants, spring boks, vleek boks, duiker boks and the other kinds of 'boks' with which the country abounds when I was suddenly confronted by the biggest ostrich I ever saw.

As he stood before me, intent regarding me, he looked to be six feet tall, and for the moment I lost my presence of mind.

Then I backed away, intending to shoot the big bird, but to my utter dismay found that the magazine of my gun was empty.

Then I remembered hearing that the legs of an ostrich turn pink when he is angry and I looked at his limbs.

They were not pink, but almost red, and, as he started threateningly toward me, I threw myself flat on the ground, this being admittedly the best way to escape death or injury from the blows of one of these birds when infuriated.

The ostrich came close to my side and after intensely regarding me for a moment poked out his long neck, inserted his bill into the pocket of my waistcoat, abstracted my watch and calmly swallowed it with a look of intense satisfaction.

Next he exploited the pockets of my trousers and, finding my knife, gulped that down with an expression of gastronomic delight. My bunch of keys followed suit, as did every thing in the way of metal or glass I had about me. Then, having made a sumptuous meal of my personal belongings, he stalked majestically away, leaving me unharmed.

I got up finally and went through my pockets to see if he had left anything, when, to my utter surprise, I found my watch, knife, keys and everything else in their proper receptacles. Then it dawned upon me that I had dreamed a bad dream and I resolved never again to take a nap on the veldt."

BEAVER IS INDUSTRIOUS.

Animal Has a Wonderful Scent and Not Easily Trapped.

These animals usually herd together in small families, go up stream during the spring freshets and remain there, says a Forest and Stream writer. If their dens are cut out a dog can be sent into the hole and the occupants driven out. They are then easily caught and killed, as they are clumsy on land. They have a wonderful scent, which makes it impossible to trap them on land. To trap them even in water requires more or less practice on the part of the trapper. He has a cunning creature to deal with and he must proceed carefully.

If the creek is not frozen over the surest way to catch him is to use a No. 4 trap, set back far enough to catch his foot hand as he climbs out upon the bank, the water being somewhat shallow. It is best to catch the hind foot rather than the front foot, which he readily twists or gnaws off. A No. 2 trap is too small for the hind foot, for he can cover it and not get fast in it.

If the trap is set under the ice and he is caught by either front or hind foot he will drown, as he begins to struggle and soon smother. He gets excited and does not try to gnaw himself loose, which he might otherwise do.

Like the muskrat, the beaver can swim a long distance under the ice by breathing upward and inhaling again as he swims across.

This breath is soon collected in bubbles under the ice. An occasional "air hole" also serves him, so that I have known him to cross under ice on a lake a mile and a half wide.

I had my first experience in beaver trapping when a boy of 14.

This was at Beaver lake, five miles from the Des Moines river.

The remains of an old beaver dam are still to be seen there. Since then I have not trapped for 30 years, but still last winter, when I caught enough to make two sets of furs.

It is the best of all the traps.

Wm. C. Davis, cooper, of No. 603 North Main street, says, "A day before Christmas I paid 15 cents and 50 cents for a box of 'Do May' pills and through the small of my back made it so painful for me to stoop or lift anything that I was unable to do any work or to have any pleasure. Whenever I took 'Do May' I could sit up at night without bother me at all. While lying in bed while lying in bed. Sharp twinges often kept me awake for hours and in the morning I arose feeling tired and devoid of all energy and ambition. The condition of the kidneys was also very bad, especially at night. I doctored myself and used many remedies until I became discouraged, for instead of getting better I seemed to grow worse. Finally I happened to read an advertisement in Doan's Kidney Cure, which I had seen before, recommended by people near by, I could not help but believe that they were a good remedy. I got a box at Thomas & Trahern's drug store, and after using them a few days I could see a decided improvement; the pain in my back left me entirely and the pain in the kidneys was restored to a normal and healthy condition."

CHILDHOOD DAYS

Called to Mind by Visit to Old Home.

Reflections of One Who Believes in the Motto "There is No Place Like Home."

WRITTEN BY DICK THACKER, LAFAYETTE, KY.

"There is no Place Like Home."

I never hear the repetition of this true old motto but what I think of that amiable old place where I spent my old happy days.

I was sitting in the door a few nights ago when I heard the young men of this town sing a song called "Home, Sweet Home."

During that transient time many events of my childhood days stole back into memory and after retiring they bore upon my mind until I was roused of a whole night's repose.

I was born on a farm lying about three miles east of Roaring Spring, known as the old Thacker place. My father sold this farm when I was a lad of thirteen, and I have lived a nomadic life ever since. I have wandered until there are five years added to the meridian of my allotted days, but yet I have found no place like home.

There is a difference in the people, a difference in the flowers, a difference in the flavor of fruits. In fact, I am unable to find anything as it had in the days of my youth.

It had been a number of years since I had seen the old home and I had long sought for a chance to ken it once more.

So sometimes since I availed myself of an opportunity to drive out there. On account of the many changes, when I first drove in upon the farm I thought my trip would be a sad disappointment and it was before I could realize that it was the place I once called home, but when I drove around to some of my long-ago playgrounds I found plenty of tokens to reveal that it was the same old place where I had spent my best days.

I drove around on the south side of the house where the woodpile used to be and the first thing that entered my mind was the happy hours I had spent sitting there listening to a mocking bird as he sang and passed to and fro from a wattle to an oak tree, a distance of hundred yards. This bird staid around the old home for a number of years and I have seen him only once since.

I have been a number of years since I have seen the grave yard.

The saddest sight that met my eyes was the grave yard. The fence was down, the tombstones were broken, and the yard was covered with briars and bushes.

It made the tears flow from my eyes when I thought of the good people that I had followed to that lonely place and bid a last farewell. I tried to search out the graves of my two grandfathers and grandmothers but the stones were gone, the little mounds that once marked them had disappeared, therefore I could not distinguish one grave from another. I have a number of other relatives sleeping there in that land of wilds and the thoughts of them never fail to steal back into my memory whenever I hear the old maxim "There is no place like home."

She probes, and then points to the significant fact calmly, silently. She never howls and waves her arms and grows indignant over what she has found. She brings it out into the full glare of her exposition, and then passes on, disdaining to play upon the passion aroused in the reader. And that is the method of a true historian.

spent many pleasant hours listening to him. I have often thought how glad I would be if I could allure him into a trap, but all the traps I set him proved to be failures. I remember once of setting a trap in the old plum orchard where this bird often came in search of food. One day while I was playing in the yard I saw him fly over that way and light near my trap. I watched him closely, thinking that he would soon be mine, but he only peeped under and with a chirp, rose and flew away, seemingly to say "you can't fool me." I am a great lover of the mocking-bird and sit hours at a time now and listen to their chant, but none that I hear nowadays fascinate me like the one I do. I often think of when I hear the old motto "There is no place like home."

When I drove around in front of the house I looked over the country at the farms that encompassed the old farm and I could see symbols of seven farm dwellings. In the days when I was a child each house was exhilarated by father, mother, sisters and brothers. Now there is but one family out of the seven that is living in that neighborhood. Most of the old people are in a better world and the young ones that survive are scattered from Maine to California. There were six of us children in family and often the evening would gather at our house and the evening would be spent in all kinds of amusements, but, alas! those days are long gone by and the home that was once full of life is now a place of desolation.

The saddest sight that met my eyes was the grave yard. The fence was down, the tombstones were broken, and the yard was covered with briars and bushes.

It made the tears flow from my eyes when I thought of the good people that I had followed to that lonely place and bid a last farewell. RASCALLY REYNARD

The Naturalist Tells Bits of History of His Tame Fox.

How "The Sprite" Revenged Himself for the Impudence and Ingratitude of an Old Man—How He Lost His Mate.

Readers of this series may perhaps remember "The Sprite," one of the three little fox cubs which I dug out of a burrow last April, while they were yet blind and woolly. The Sprite is still a good cub, and, although he has lost sight of all appearance of a puppy, at heart he is as young and mischievous as ever.

For a long time the young fox had the run of the house, but there finally came a time when, in the interests of humanity, we decided that it was time to confine him to a cage. In fact,

"The Sprite" had stayed another week. It is a question whether there would have been a roof for any of us. Then the neighbors, good-natured as they were, had got into the habit of counting their chickens every night before retiring, and all that were not "pestered" were not counted for just in one way. So we built a large cage of wire and wood, out in the garden, and into it we put "The Sprite," with a pretty little yellow-haired vixen to keep him company.

Among the many to whom the young foxes were objects of interest were some hens who tried to stay into the garden and roosted through the netting. The vixen, like the little lady that she was, paid no attention to these vulgar fowls, but "The Sprite" chased after the insult, which he frequently sought to wipe out, only to be round on her again and not come clean through thick wire netting. So he gave it up, and bided his time. The hens became bolder and bolder, and strayed back and forth, close beside the cage, twisting their saucy necks that they might see the better. One morning the boldest of these fowls was walking past, and "The Sprite" was nowhere to be seen. It may have been irresistible curiosity which prompted the hen to find out where her mate had got to in that hour she had thrice her head through the netting. It never came out again. There was a flash of red, and the fox was wiping out all insults. The good little jaws came together with a "click," the black front legs straightened out like rams rods, and then the hen's neck was made of wire cable that he would have had the whole of her.

That bit of revenge, sweet as it was, but gave him an appetite for what was to follow some weeks later. I am in the habit of taking him for a walk, and one day I took him for a walk, and I say I take him on a chain. On the morning of Labor Day I opened the cage door, as usual, with his collar in my hand, but before I could put it on, he slipped past me and out into the garden. As though he had been planning for this, he went straight to his food owner in his wake, doing the best bit of sprinting he has done for some years. It was no use; "The Sprite" knew his advantage, and even turned to laugh in my face. In another moment he was over a wall, and in the next he was in the garden, and the fowls, which scattered like shuffles before a "ten-strike." But they were not quick enough for the fox, who had one of them in his teeth even as I came up with him. My presence did not disconcert him in the least, either; he kept his presence of mind, in spite of my shouts and the angry exclamations of the hens. Of course, he dodged me, but even as he did so his mind was strictly on the business in hand. He glanced quickly about, as much to say, "Are there any more around here while I'm at it? Oh, yes, here's one" and before I could say a word he had the hen in his teeth and away he dashed with the two in his mouth. As though he went to my garden, and round to his own pen, where he stopped long enough to bite the chickens till he was sure they were dead.

After this all went well with the fox, until about three weeks ago, when he was away from home and left an assistant in charge of the animals. Two nights later my neighbor's wife called to say that our foxes were in her yard. Mrs. Baynes went over, and in the dark light saw the form of both a fox and a hen, the house, the roof of which was low enough for them to jump upon. She called "The Sprite," and he followed her back home without giving the least trouble, but when she returned for the vixen the latter had run off into the woods.

After this, as though he had been hearted and happy, was almost hearted again. Night after night he cared little for his food. So genuine was his grief that we got another mate for him. She arrived yesterday, and last night, for the first time since his bereavement, he did not sadden us with his pitiful howls.

A BIG TRANSITION

Wake Island in the Pacific and its Interesting History.

Unclaimed Five Years Ago, It Is Now Owned by the Great Nation on Earth and Upholds the Great Pacific Cable.

One of the remarkable transitions which has resulted from the progress and development of the United States during the past few years has been the erection of a cable station and port and path to the midst of the great Pacific to the identity of a cable station. Wake Island has long been known to navigators of the southern Pacific as a low-lying coral reef island not discernible more than five miles away in the day time and not at all at night, hence prone to be a danger to ships.

When the United States came into control of the Philippines the need of a cable to the new possessions was realized. Gen. Greene, while en route to Manila in 1898, issues Wake Island, and finding it uninhabited planted a record of possession and raised the flag of the United States. Realizing the value of the island as a landing place for the Pacific cable which was under consideration at that time, formal possession was taken of it the following year. It is from one to 20 miles long, and is from 10 to 20 miles wide.

LANDING THE CABLE AT GUAM.

LANDING THE CABLE AT GUAM.

The larger part of it is a lagoon. Vegetation is scarce, there is no fresh water, and the only food to be found consists of a few birds and plenty of fish.

It would be hard to imagine more desolate, remote, or lonely an island.

It lies close to the weirdness and forsaken loneliness of the place is given by the group of rough wooden crosses placed by shipwrecked sailors over the graves of shipmates. One of the crosses marks the grave of the captain of the shipwrecked vessel, who died 30 years ago.

The crew, all but the captain and one man, went to explore Bird Island, which is enclosed by the same reef, and on their return found their captain murdered and accused their shipmate of the crime. On the departure of the crew, he was buried at sea, and in spite of his entreaties this was done.

He was eventually rescued in an insane condition by a passing vessel.

The other graves are those of a part of the crew of an American bark which died of scurvy after being shipwrecked on the island.

The laying of the cable upon the island was accomplished in a manner similar to that which marked the work at Guam.

Among other advantages offered in these highly finished cars, a few of the most important points only are mentioned:

SIX ADDITIONS

Result Firm Baptist Meeting—
Dr. Hamilton to Visit His Birthplace Today.

The meeting at the Baptist church has reached the proportions of a revival and the crowds were so great Sunday that both rooms of the church were thrown open. At the night service there were five additions to the church, making six up to that time. Dr. Hamilton's sermons are making a fine impression upon all who hear them. Another service was held last night and the meeting will continue until Friday night.

Dr. Hamilton, accompanied by Mrs. Hamilton and one or two friends, will go to Gracey this morning to see the house where he was born in January, 1869, now occupied by Mr. W. R. Fourqurean. His parents left that neighborhood when he was a very small child and the future preacher has never been back since. He will return from Gracey in time for the 3 p. m. service.

In Memory of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Barber.

On November 9, 1903, God in His infinite wisdom and grace, called upon us to give up one of our members; and our beloved sister, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Barber, answered the last earthly summons of her Master. The word of God was her daily companion and Jesus was her familiar friend. She was always ready for His coming and found her calmly awaiting His call—"Come ye blessed of My Father."

To such it has been said—"Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in its season." She had passed her three-score years and ten by five years. Her life was a great spiritual force in her home, a blessing to her community, and a veritable benediction to her church.

Her loss in every place in life is beyond human ability to repair. May God, who alone can fill the vacant place, sustain and comfort her loved ones by His unbounded grace, is the prayer of her sisters.

Done by order of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Salem Baptist church, this, the 25th day of Nov. 1903.

GUN PLAY

Made, But Bullet Went Wide of Mark.

In the city court Saturday, C. B. Hammond was bound over to circuit court, on a charge of shooting at Lee Loving. He furnished a bond of $250. The trouble occurred in Hammond's room on North Virginia street. The men, it seems, had not been on friendly terms for some time. Loving went to Hammond's room Friday afternoon and applied some vile epithets to him. As he was leaving the room Hammond took a shot at him, but missed. While the trial was in progress it was discovered that Hammond had a revolver concealed on his person and he was fined $25 for this. The shooting will be investigated by the grand jury at the spring term.
